THE ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF A TRAFFIC MARSHAL

While accidents can happen anywhere, one of the top ways to reduce the chance of this happening on a building site or in a loading bay is to employ the services of a traffic marshal. Also known as Vehicle Banksman. These are the people who ensure safe movement of large vehicles around a site and reduce the chance that accidents do happen.

THE ROLE OF A TRAFFIC MARSHAL

Being a traffic marshal is a little like being the eyes and ears of the driver of a large vehicle, particularly cranes. These vehicles are awkward to move and don't allow the driver a good line of sight around him so a traffic marshal is instrumental in this safe movement. The marshal can use a number of ways to communicate with the driver, ranging from simple hand signals to a radio connection to give full and specific instructions.

The job is about more than just helping large vehicles move around the site. Traffic marshals receive a risk assessment briefing and use the information provided in this along with their training to carry out their role on a daily basis. A construction site in particular is an ever changing environment and a marshal's job is to be aware of these changes and take them into consideration while doing their job.

Movement patterns of these large vehicles are another area that the traffic marshal will require knowledge about. Some large vehicles follow a systematic pattern, for instance arriving at the site at a particular time every morning. Or a certain task may be carried out at a specific time each week. Knowing when these vehicles will be moving around is another aspect of the job and ensuring safety when they do.

MARSHAL RESPONSIBILITIES

The responsibilities of the Traffic Marshal therefore starts with ensuring that the area around the vehicle is clear and safe before it begins to manoeuvre. The marshal will then walk in the front of the vehicle, clearing any obstructions from the vehicle's path, while also looking out for anything that could cause an obstacle for its progress or even a distraction for the driver. Once the path is clear, the marshal will then stand still in a safe position where the driver of the vehicle can see him and communicate with them, regardless of the means used. If there is a long distance movement involved, then the marshal will repeat the process, ensuring each section of the route is clear and that he can stand in a new position for the driver to watch. While doing this, the marshal should also keep watch for other people in the area as well as other vehicles. This wider environmental awareness can help spot a potential accident or issue before it happens and is as important as any other aspect of the job.
